one prime-time television commercial depicted a high street bustling with adults on the drug hugging, not just each other, but lampposts, street signs - anything they could grab really.

suggests that even intoxicated people's behavior during encounters may be constrained by their awareness.